SEPTEMBER 2017

Kirchentag 2017 Theologie und Wiener Schnitzel

This is the first opportunity I've had to reflect on my visit to Berlin last May for the Lutheran Church conference. It was joy for the third time to encounter old friends in Berlin at the 2017 Kirchentag. The opening service took place at the Brandenburg Gate during which Justin Welby, the Archbishop of Canterbury gave a greeting together with the Roman Catholic Archbishop and the presiding Bishop of the German Lutheran Church. This was the first time an Archbishop of Canterbury had been invited to give a word of greeting at such an opening event.

The following day, former US president Barack Obama joined Chancellor Angela Merkel on the main stage. During a 90-minute discussion on democracy and global responsibility, Obama spoke of the need for the renewal of the international order against the background of xenophobia, nationalism, intolerance and anti-democratic trends. "We have to push back against those trends that would violate human rights, or that would suppress democracy, or would restrict individual freedoms of conscience and religion," said the former US president. "We can't isolate ourselves. We can't hide behind a wall," he continued, speaking at the place where the city was once divided between East and West by the Berlin Wall.

Organised every two years in a different German city, the Kirchentag this year gathered more than 100,000 participants of all ages; notably, there were more than 6,000 foreign participants from 105 countries - a record to which I was happy to contribute.

Each Kirchentag brings together figures from church, political, economic and national life and serves as a major forum for debates on current social and political challenges, as well as offering opportunities for worship, workshops, music and culture.

This year's event fell in the year of the 500th anniversary of the Reformation, and was one of the main events in Germany celebrating this jubilee. Its conclusion was in Wittenberg, a place celebrated worldwide as the place where Martin Luther's Reformation began in the sixteenth century. One of the organizers' hopes was that the impetus of the Reformation would help the nation face challenges such as the integration of refugees, climate change, and financial and economic governance. "The ideas and fundamental convictions of the Reformation have changed the world," this year's Kirchentag president, Christina Aus der Au (a Swiss theologian and philosopher) said on the opening day. "Its anniversary falls in a year, at a time, characterized by rapid change. The world is being rocked by crises and wars."

The Kirchentag observed one minute's silence on Friday 26th May for the more than 10,000 people who have lost their lives on their journey to Europe, fleeing war, hardship and terrorism.

During his aforementioned greeting, Justin Welby, spoke of the terror attacks in Berlin before Christmas and in Manchester, two days before the opening of the Kirchentag. "We pray, we mourn, we lament, we cry out, we protest," he said. Since then there have, of course, been more such terror attacks, in Spain for example only a couple of weeks ago.

I thought that there might have been the odd reference to Brexit thrown in here and there but there we not.

I'm happy to say that something to make my life a little easier took shape whilst in Berlin. The approach on forming a working group here in Lichfield to share the work of the partnership was formulated. Once back home I set about drafting a rationale, terms of reference and reporting structure for a such a group. After sharing this with Bishop Michael, he kindly offered to encourage those whom I thought might form the group to be involved. He also invited his wife, Julia, to become a member as she has academic links with the University of Hamburg. Seven out of the eight invitees accepted the challenge and I look forward to holding an inaugural meeting in October. When future activities need planning I will now have a small group of people with whom I can share the load; this will be most helpful.

Having advertised this year's Anticipating Advent visit to Rostock on the Diocesan website, we now have 10 firm bookings with at least 3 more contemplating joining us. There seems a new impetus with the Nordkirche partnership which is very encouraging.

Alles Gute!

It's an open synod for anyone with an interest in the theme to attend. Bill (formerly of S. George's - Newcastle), now heads the Black Country Urban and Industrial Mission and its work will feature in his presentation to us.
